SUBJECT: Firearms Indoctrination Course

DATE: 17 January 1951

1. In order to instruct personnel effectively in the technique of self defensive type handgun shooting a course of approximately four hours should be employed. This four hour course is considered to be the minimum in which adequate confidence could be instilled into the average student and could be amplified to suit special needs. It cannot be thought of as a complete course, but one which would bring all personnel to a minimum standard of proficiency required in general operations.
